I took a nap, but I couldn't erase that picture from my head.

I saw her crying and shouting and cursing.
It was my fault.
I packed up.

There's nothing left,

only me.

... I was so alone.
I was alone.
I was alone.

Everyone left me.

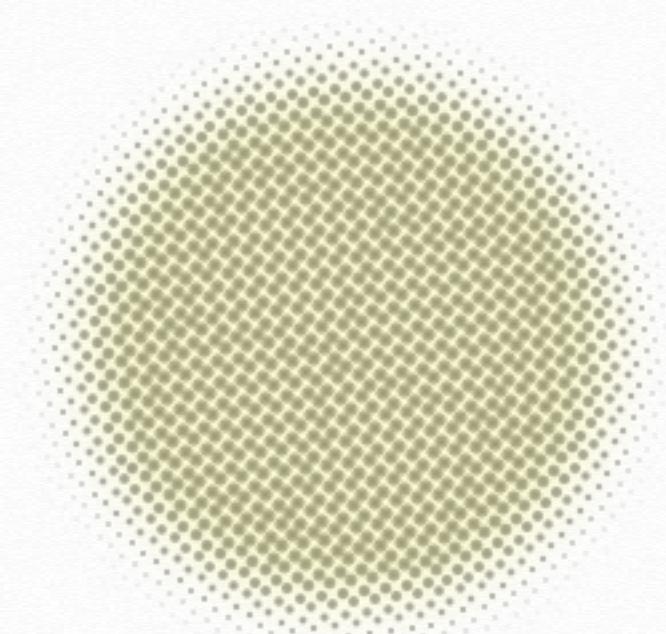

I stepped foot on the desert,
and I could sense the end.

The end of the journey.
And the end of all.

- The sun was hanging above my head.
- My legs were shaking.
- I could barely breathe.
- Sand would take away my footsteps.
- And the wind would take me away.
- I don't know how long I will walk.
- But I couldn't do this anymore.

"Master, keep going." It was V, and I felt nothing. They were blurry – all of them.

Where am I?

Who am I?

I was alone.

Again.

Someone was holding me.
Her hands were freezing.
Maybe she was crying.
Who was she?
V was dead.
I abandoned her.
And a droid won't cry, won't they?
I brought myself to darkness.
I thought I would never hear her again;
she couldn't talk anymore.
But there was a voice whispered.
It felt sob.

I started shouting with my arms waving.
My throat was on fire, and there was pain everywhere
The shadow of the unknown object shrinks,
